On essay number one, I believe I earned at the very least an 80. I believe so, because for the first time, and per instruction, I looked at an assignment for as more than a grade. I believe my answer to the prompt was thoughtful and genuinely took the time to reflect on literacy in my life. I do understand that I have a problem with separating my writing from my stream of consciousness ~~so that~~ <sup>this</sup> tends to have an effect on the way my writing flows, and my grammar. I did not do my best. Not for lack of caring, but because I tend to procrastinate. This cuts my editing and reflection time down to a minimum, or most likely non-existent. If I could do anything differently, I would motivate myself as opposed to being motivated by deadlines. I think this would take care of the grammatical errors I was not able to catch, those of which brought my

grade down
